

Serving the Community

An old postcard - BTM Collection

From the BTM Collection

From 1887 to 1913

Horse Tram No. 1

For many years, members of the Ballarat Tramway Museum knew of an odd-looking 'bungalow' behind a house in Ballarat East. It was an old horse tram.

The Museum was able to take delivery of the tramcar, the original No. 1, in December 1985. Within a year funding had been obtained to start work. The tram was placed on the wheels and parts of an old Melbourne cable tram trailer.

All four corner pillars needed to be replaced - along with most of the rest of the tram. Garry Wood, Dave Macartney and Jacqui Edwards slaved away - replicating this part, restoring that. Four of the roof ribs required replacement, so an Echuca company bent the timbers with steam.

Roof slats, top rails, window sashes all started to be 're-created'. Warren Doubleday juggled pieces of metal and timber to create the spiral staircases, handrails and the end aprons. Painting and sign-writing were satisfying tasks.

And then on 7 November 1992, the resplendent Horse Tram No. 1 ventured out onto Wendouree Parade. Ajax and Hercules, two magnificent Percheron horses handled the loads with great aplomb and ease. A horse tram had been resurrected!

Ballarat Trams are Ballarat History

Ballarat's Horse Trams

Wendouree Parade.

Photo: Carolyn Dean

Ballarat Tramway Museum

Ballarat's Horse Trams

Horse trams began running through Ballarat's streets on 21 December 1887. Six trams conveyed some 300 guests from the City to the Gardens, where speeches and a banquet followed.

Service to the general public started five days later with three trams which were well patronised. Ballarat Tramway Company Limited housed the double-deck trams and its horses in a large corrugated iron shed on the north side of Lake Wendouree.

Two horses were used for each tram and on very steep hills, a third horse was hitched up. Horses and their feed were costly.

While the conductors wore uniforms, the drivers did not always do the same, preferring warm and water-proof outer clothing in winter. The crews worked long hours and were permitted only one day off a month.

Passengers crowded onto the trams during late night shopping on Saturday, especially on the long Sebastopol route. So a 'top' (deck) conductor was added to help with the extra people.

The horse trams ran around Lake Wendouree, carrying almost no passengers in winter, but overcrowded on sunny summer days. Late in January 1888, it is reported that the trams carried 10,000 to the Gardens in one day.

Horse trams were replaced by electric trams in 1905. However, they continued to run on the Sebastopol route until 1913

Unloading the remains at Depot, December 1985.

Photo Dave Macartney.

Inaugural running in Wendouree Parade, November 1992.

Photo W. F. Scott

Ballarat Vintage Tramway Botanic Gardens Lake Wendouree

Trams operate on every weekend, public holidays and school holidays from midday to 5pm. Special hires for occasions such as weddings, parties, club and school visits can also be arranged.

The Ballarat Tramway Museum is a volunteer group dedicated to preserving Ballarat's tramway heritage for future generations. Established in 1971 following the closure of the State Electricity Commission's tramway system, we have been operating the museum for over 35 years.

We invite you to consider membership to assist us in achieving our goals. There is no obligation to take part in working on the tramway. Members receive a news publication every two months. However if you would like to assist us at the depot in operating the trams or maintaining them you would be most welcome.

For further information contact:

Ballarat Tramway Museum

P. O Box 632 Ballarat 3353

Phone / Fax: (03) 5334 1580

Email: info@btm.org.au

Our web page is at www.btm.org.au